“One generation passes away, and another generation comes; But the earth abides forever” (Eccl 1:4).

Solomon, the wise preacher (Eccl 1:1, 16-19), lamented over the vanity of life. Solomon realized that no matter the worldly successes or failures we experience, in the grand scheme of things, it is all vanity. People are born and people die, yet the world just keeps on spinning like they never existed.

This is a lesson in humility. Some people believe the world revolves around them. Some Christians actually believe that the church can’t operate without them. As I’ve said before, so say I now again, if a person believes the church can’t function without them, just let them try dying. The church will have their funeral, eat a meal afterward, and assemble for worship that very next Sunday. This is to simply say that while we all love everyone, life keeps going.

Let our time on the earth be unselfishly focused on the hereafter (Col 3:1,2). We will spend more time in eternity than we will on this earth and what we have done in this life will ring through eternity. Solomon came to this final conclusion at the end of the book (Eccl 12:13-14).
